Need a mortgage, but feeling like your lender is dragging you along?

At The New York Mortgage Company, we deliver personalized service with one person in mind . . . You.

These days, it seems that getting responsive service from most mortgage lenders is a thing of the past.

As a direct lender, NYMC minimizes the delays that are often associated with borrowing from a large bank, making sure that the processing of your loan never drags – so you can get the approval you want, super fast.

We also offer the best rates around. Plus, a wide range of loan products to choose from, including Interest Only Loans, Jumbo Loans, Refinance Loans, Bridge Loans, FHA/VA Loans, True No Doc Loans and many others.

Ask about our LIBOR Interest Only loan at 2.25% rate, 2.42% APR

ARM APRs may increase after consummation. Offer subject to credit approval.
Advertised rates are prevailing and are subject to change without notice.

Contact NYMC today, and see why when it comes to your mortgage, we take things personally.

The Down Factory Store

www.downfactorystore.com

2004 Extravaganza

Thanks to our retail and "online" customers we are one of the largest resources for goose down comforters, pillows and featherbeds. Consumers that compare our quality and prices to those of department stores, discounters, catalogs and other web sites find that we are indeed unbeatable - and we guarantee that! Know the facts of down before you buy.

FACT: Down comes from the chest of the bird to keep it insulated from the weather. Feathers (those things with quills) come from the back of the bird to keep it dry. Down can cost as much as $10.00 an ounce, feathers 10¢ an ounce. Over 90% of down manufacturers find it to their advantage to add over 30% feathers to their down. It's like buying three pounds of ground sirloin and getting two pounds of meat and one pound of fat. You have paid for meat and got fat, it's the same with their down, they both do it because it's legal. We do not contaminate our down by adding feathers to it.

Guaranteed LOWEST Down Prices in THE COUNTRY & THE HAMPTONS

(CATALOGS, CHAINS, DISCOUNTERS WE BEAT THEM ALL)

PHONE ORDER DEPARTMENT

KNOW THE FACTS BEFORE YOU BUY IT

FACT: Fill power, this is the amount the cubic inches filled by one ounce of down. Higher fill power means a higher quality down. You will find that as the quality of the down increases, so does the comfort & life of the item.

FACT: We use only high thread count, baffle box construction, 100% cotton covers on our down comforters & pillows. Down insulates by trapping air and holding in your body temperature, keeping you comfortable through the night. Low quality comforters are usually heavier because it takes more of an inferior down to fill a comforter. Inferior down becomes clumpy and it can't breath, resulting in your becoming over heated and uncomfortable. Our high quality down gives you the warmth and comfort without the weight.

FACT: In all likelihood you will have your comforter longer than the car you are now driving.

"We go the distance for you."

Peconic Bay Scallops are farm raised in China's clean cold waters. These scallops are native to the ocean waters near Long Island Sound, NY and Nantucket Island. Baby Peconic Scallops were flown to eastern China in the early 1980's and transplanted in the ocean waters.
These waters near China's East Coast provide the ideal purity and temperature to grow scallops that are healthy, nutritious and very tasty.

Frozen Scallops

The Peconic Bay Scallops You Eat Tomorrow May Be Imported From China

By Dan Rattiner

For the last two years, our local fishermen have failed to bring in a scallop harvest of any size. We've had bluefish and striped bass in abundance, we've had lobsters in great amounts — which seems to have made up for a dearth of them three and four years ago — but scallops are a puzzle. Environmentalists have tried mightily to understand the scallop shortage problem, but as with many other things in nature — the red-tide algae that appears on our shores unexpectedly some years but not others, or the invasion of Asian phragmites that have taken over the wetlands of many of our ponds — the causes elude. There's a lot we don't understand about nature.

On the other hand, there is the marketing business and the import-export business. The other day, the brother of Bob Kent of the Cornell University Sea Grant Laboratory in Riverhead was in a supermarket and saw two pound boxes of Gold Star Peconic Bay Scallops in the freezer. He bought a few. They had come from China.

> "Baby Peconic Scallops were flown to eastern China in the early 1980s and transplanted in the ocean waters."

After they got eaten, Kent sent us the empty box. We reprint parts of it above. The small print explains a lot.

"Peconic Bay Scallops are farm raised in China's clean cold waters. These scallops are native to the ocean waters near Long Island Sound, NY and Nantucket Island," the copy reads.

"Baby Peconic Scallops were flown to eastern China in the early 1980s and transplanted in the ocean waters. These waters near China's East Coast provide the ideal purity and temperature to grow scallops that are healthy, nutritious and very tasty.

"The scallops are harvested and frozen the same day in HACCP approved facilities to bring you the finest Bay Scallops available."

From an import-export perspective, reading the labels, you have the following sequence. Baby scallops are brought by freighter to China 20 years ago. Descendants are grown and frozen in HACCP facilities under the watchful eyes of a Quality Control inspector, are imported by FoodHold USA, Inc, in Windsor Locks, Connecticut, and then are bought by a variety of food distributors who deliver them in trucks to various supermarkets under the Gold Star Seafood name. From the time they leave the factory on the eastern shore of China, they remain in a frozen state. Bring them home from the store in your car, still frozen, and when you want to use them, thaw them ahead of time in a bowl in your refrigerator overnight. Then cook and eat. Two recipes for Peconic Bay Scallops are printed on the side of the box. We reprint them at the end of this article.

Scallops (continued from page 9)

Or you can go to a restaurant, which, if it follows this procedure, can produce delicious and creative entrees featuring premium-quality Peconic Bay scallops.

Years ago, eastern Long Island was famous for producing Long Island Duck. There were dozens of duck farms in Eastport, Moriches, Westhampton, Hampton Bays, Southampton and Water Mill, all along the shore facing out from the mainland into Shinnecock and Moriches Bay. The tidal action of the bay would wash away tons of foul-smelling duck droppings. It was not pretty. And when concern for the environment became a primary concern, the farms shut down, one by one. There are none left today.

Interestingly, the ducks that we raised were originally from China. Baby ducklings were brought here by freighter in the nineteenth century, and they thrived. They were considered the best ducks around. On menus, they were alternately Long Island Duck or Peking Duck.

One wonders if the Peconic Bay Scallops grown along the eastern shore of China are served in Beijing restaurants as Eastern Shore Scallops or Peconic Bay Scallops.

By the way, the city of Beijing used to be spelled, in English, Peking. It has always been pronounced the same way by the Chinese and it is their city. Also, they continue to spell it the same way in the Chinese language, though around 1950, the English listened a little more carefully and for our purposes decided a better spelling in English would be Beijing. It was officially changed.

As for the duck farmers, they paid it no never mind. And so Peking Duck it continues to be today in various restaurants, though very few ducks come from Long Island.

What is it, exactly, that the waiters in fine restaurants mean when they say there is on the menu "freshly caught Chilean Sea Bass?" Sea Bass have been flown in to Westhampton from Santiago aboard a special plane with an aquarium inside, earlier in the day? Well, with this economics lesson, maybe now you know.

And what is, exactly, Long Island Lemonade? I see it ordered at various bars in the area. Where the hell do they grow that?

Maybe in Czechoslovakia? •

Economy Watch

Good In The Short , Great In The Mid, We Won't Talk About The Long Term

By Dan Rattiner

People have been asking me what I think the future holds for the eastern end of Long Island as far as the economy is concerned, and I am here to tell you that in the medium term anyway, it looks very good indeed.

In the short term, of course, we have the regular business cycle. Things go up and things go down, stocks rise and fall, its hard to get a bead on things with this Keynesian view of the cyclical nature of the economy, which has, without fail, done its thing every decade since the start of the Industrial Age.

As for the long term, say two or three centuries, we can safely say that things look poor. As global warming proceeds, the glaciers will melt, the seas will rise and everything on the East End will be underwater. Just the tops of a few of the tallest East End buildings will remain — the six story Montauk residential skyscraper in the center of that town, the steeples of the East Hampton, Southampton, Westhampton Beach and Bridgehampton Presbyterian Churches, the steeple of the Old Whaler's Church in Sag Harbor, if they rebuild it as it was, and various TV and cell phone towers in the area.

Also, as the amount of land shrinks, there will be less of it to make new golf courses. On the other hand, think of the new water views...

On the other hand, the middle term is the very "bright spot" on the horizon, if you will. Predictions by scientists about how many degrees Fahrenheit the temperature will rise before the end of the century do vary, but it appears it will be on the order of ten degrees. This should be very good for the East End.

Fishermen who have been worried that the fisheries have been in decline around the world will discover that the number and size of all bodies of waters will have increased by half again. This means that even if there are 30% fewer fish in the ocean per cubic yard of water, the total number of fish will stay the same — except that the fish will have more room to swim around.

In places like Noyac Bay, Three Mile

Harbor, Lake Agawam and Shinnecock Bay, which should expand dramatically, this means more excitement, more room for the fish to dart this way and that, and more room for fishing boat captains to chase them. The fishing industry — commercial and sport — should thrive.

Furthermore, tourism should thrive. With larger bodies of water, comes more coastline. I expect to see more oceanfront resorts, more beachfront homes and far more beach-related activities. A ten degree rise in temperature, of course, means a summer beach season extending from late April until mid-November and that will mean more swimming, volleyball, surfing and Frisbee. And the wintertime — well, there will be no wintertime as we know it today — will just be a mild interlude when, for a brief time, men put their tennis shorts away and women put cover-ups over their bikinis.

Environmentalists say that around the world every year, five thousand species go extinct. But they fail to mention, probably because they get more publicity when they talk gloom and doom, that every year around the world, about five thousand new species evolve. Most of them are in the warmer climates, simply because there is more of an abundance of life in the tropics than in, say, Greenland, and so, it would appear that in the next hundred years, the losses will decline and the new species will increase — merely because more of the earth is tropical.

And so we are fortunate that here on the East End, we are positioned to benefit from this accident of circumstance right through to the next century. The Hamptons should see palm trees, pelicans, flamingos, parrots and all sorts of new and, as yet unborn, colorful birds and flowers, as well as a staggering amount of new kinds of fruits and vegetables such as grapefruits, avocados and coconuts growing on trees in the area. From an agricultural perspective, the future will be a cornucopia of new opportunities, wherein potato farmers can plant sweet potatoes, plantains and sugar cane, and wherein vineyard owners can supplement their wine crops with rum, Scotch, vodka and gin.

From these changes, of course, there will probably be some losers. Golf will probably become more expensive because keeping the grounds up will require more and more labor as time goes by. Also, as the amount of land shrinks, there will be less of it to make new golf courses. On the other hand, think of the new water views and shots over water that will be at hand. World-class courses will be built on the East End in the coming century.

Transportation will become more difficult here during this medium term. The water should break through in Napeague, isolating Montauk. The Shinnecock Canal should naturally widen of its own accord, splitting the eastern Hamptons from the West. With water surging through the flat pine barrens, Westhampton Beach will become an island. And Shelter Island will probably vanish entirely.

Nevertheless, what are problems for some — the cutting off of the various highways and byways — will be opportunities for others. Ferry services by the dozen will spring up. There will be tolls to be collected and jobs aplenty for everybody, it seems to me.

There will, of course, be a decline in the economies of companies that make winter apparel or offer skiing or dog sledding. As it happens, there are very few manufacturing companies or mountains or ski resort operators in these parts.

All in all, it should be a very good time economically for the East End, simply because of where we are on the globe.

I predict that the real estate business will also be affected in a big way because of these changes. The price of land, of course, is a function of how much land there is available and how many people want it. With the population of the New York Metropolitan area continuing to grow, and with the amount of land shrinking, particularly in the second half of the century, prices, which are already considered very high, will simply go through the roof.

On the basis of the above, we have changed our recommendation for the East End from "hold" to "buy," and in the few areas where we have up until now issued a "sell," we move that order up to "hold."

It should be a good century for the eastern end of Long Island. •

Dumb Robbers

The Photo Bandits In Centereach And The Cell Phone Bandit In Mattituck

By Dan Rattiner

Over the holidays, two not-so-smart robbers were caught by a combination of alert police, observant store employees and the stupid misuse of electronic gadgets. Another robber was almost caught, thanks to a very perceptive bank clerk.

The first and second robbers were a couple, a man and a woman, and I think it is one of those cases where he is never going to forgive her. The couple, a perfectly normal-looking pair, have been shoplifting. It's not on a tiny scale — a pair of gloves, or a cantaloupe under the coat. What they do is wheel stacks of electronic goods out to the parking lot in a shopping cart, take the items out of their boxes, and stash them in the trunk of their car. Then they close up the boxes, put them back into the shopping cart and wheel them in front of the store, where they just sit. At closing time, an employee will go out to clean up, find the boxes, wheel them inside, start to put them back on the shelves, and think "Hmm, these seem very light." The police are called.

The pair had hit three electronics stores in the area with this scheme, and then headed west to hit one more, the Wal-Mart in Centereach. This time, after the robbery was discovered, a clerk remembered seeing a couple putting boxes into a shopping cart at a particular time in the afternoon. She recalled the time.

Taking a picture of the other half of the shoplifting team and then leaving the picture there? Who the hell does that?

As you might know, big electronic stores are continuously monitored with overhead cameras that take one photo every second, store them on a tape which then erases them every twenty four hours to re-record on the same tape. The police and the store manager watched the tape for that particular aisle at that time, and indeed saw this couple loading the boxes. But the quality of the pictures was very poor — it's always poor, why do they use them? — and the shoplifters kept their backs to the camera. But then an officer had an idea. The couple was again seen on the tape, in an adjacent aisle, fiddling with a display of digital cameras. At one point, the woman held one up and "pretended" to take a picture of the man. Could it be she had REALLY taken a picture by accident? The cameras were examined. Indeed, right there on a Canon Powershot, he was smiling at the camera. They could tell it was him because his clothing matched the store camera. But who was he?

The next day, Newsday ran this digital photograph on the upper one third of page 26. "Any information? Call Newsday. No questions asked." And so they found him. He is James Stissi, age 36, from Nesconset. My guess is this little faux pas did not go over very well back at the hideout where the goods were and where the police found them. Taking a picture of the other half of the shoplifting team and then leaving the picture there? Who the hell does that? This gang of two has been brought up on charges.

The third and still-at-large robber, the bank robber, hit the Mattituck branch of the North Fork Bank. He's been going up to a number of bank tellers in the area, eight at last count, always with the same scheme. He walks in the front door of the bank, talking animatedly on a cell phone. He waits in line to speak to a teller, still talking on the phone, which of course, annoys all those around them. Then when he gets to the teller, he does two things at once. He takes out a third party check, endorses the back and pushes it at the teller with the brief comment that he's in a hurry and "please cash this." He continues with the cell phone call, turning his back to the teller, and talking loudly with "someone" on the other end about payroll problems. It's a big payroll. The amounts being paid are large. He sure is a big shot. He turns around to collect the hundred dollars, and if the teller hesitates and hasn't already peeled off a bunch of twenties because the man hasn't followed the procedures (to show identification and so on) he acts even more impatient. Until Mattituck, the tellers always pay him. Of course his check, which is from another bank, bounces. And the name on the check is made-up. In Mattituck, a bank clerk realized that the check was fraudulent, and the robber ran away. This "cell phone robber" has yet to be caught. •

With Me It's 20 Foot Waves. With You It's Minus 20 Wind Chill

By Dan Rattiner

On January third, just as 2004 got underway, we went to Kennedy Airport to board a plane for Hawaii. When we went up, the temperature was hovering around freezing and security everywhere was very tight. We saw soldiers on street corners. Threat level was orange. When we came down, the temperature was seventy degrees, the big news was that giant thirty foot surf was expected in a few days and the threat level was, well, here's what the Honolulu newspaper had to say.

"'People wanting to see the waves should avoid beaches without lifeguards,' lifeguard Lt. Pat Kelly said. "Because not every wave is large enough to wash ashore, people are lured to the edge and can be swept to their deaths when a larger wave arrives.'"

As far as terrorist activities are concerned, Hawaii doesn't have any. At the airport, I heard no announcements about keeping your bags under your control at all times. The luggage security check was cursory. Indeed, its an open air airport and people can wander in and out freely. Or so it seemed to me. They play Hawaiian music over the loudspeaker, the stress level is non-existent, and everybody — visitors and locals alike —has a smile on their face.

I have been to Hawaii before. There are now more people, more traffic and more traffic lights here, but like where we live, it hasn't changed that much. It's still a frothy mix of Americans, Japanese, Polynesians, natives, tourists, surfers and golfers. There are many more two story condominium apartments here than before, but for the most part there is nobody in them. The people who own them have paid a fortune for them and are busy making the money on the mainland to pay back the banks.

The overriding experience of Hawaii, or Hawai'i, as they proudly spell it now, is still the waterfalls, the birds, the cliffs, the rainforests, the horses, the beaches, the native heritage and of course the surf.

Everyone goes out to watch the huge surf, a rare thing that happens only five or six times a year. And we nailed it. People lined up along the shore, some with binoculars, others with video cameras. The surf is twenty to thirty feet high and thunders in, sometimes with brave surfers trying to ride it.

And terrorist threat prevention? What? They show you how to put tape over their mouths?

In Kauai, we stayed at the Princeville Resort Hotel, one of only three major resort hotels on that island, and in the opinion of many, the best. The public spaces are marble and glass with thirty foot ceilings, and there are three restaurants and numerous public terraces that overlook Hanalei Bay and the spectacular North Coast. Many people watch the surfing from these terraces. The sun shines, the mist from the surf is everywhere, colorful birds hop around in the dining rooms and it is altogether a breathtaking experience.

On the island of Kauai, we played on one of the golf courses at the Princeville. (The Princeville Resort occupies 2,000 acres.) Known as the Prince, it was designed by Robert Trent Jones Jr. in 1991 and is consistently ranked as one of the top ten golf courses in the country. It is also ranked as the best golf course in Hawai'i. It deserves that ranking. The fairways are extremely broad and grand, the ocean is always in sight and you often have to hit over streams or waterfalls or gorges. It is not for duffers. Not at all. The rough is simply impassable jungle and if you hit into it, you never find the ball. DON'T HUNT FOR BALLS, it says on the scorecard. So you just press on. Needless to say, unless you stay on the wide fairway, you can lose a dozen balls or more over eighteen holes. I did. The sense of it all is that you are playing on a golf course designed for royalty —Kings and Queens (and Princes) that are eight or ten feet tall. And you are not.

One afternoon, we found ourselves sitting in a bakery cafe at Hanalei Beach, drinking Chai (a sort of tea). Taped on the screen door was a flyer announcing C.E.R.T. training at the local school on the upcoming Saturday. Firemen, policemen and ambulance people would train and certify any volunteers who wished learn handle fire, disaster or terrorist threat prevention. The training was being financed by Homeland Security. But all this seemed so, so far from the reality back home. And terrorist threat prevention? What? They show you how to put tape over their mouths?

I called home on my cell phone. Cell phones are hardly ever used in Kauai. Service comes and goes like a passing shower on that island's North Shore and you almost always have to try later to finish a call. People still use payphones.

I called my son in Boston. Got through. "How's it goin'?" I asked.

"It's twelve degrees here and a biting wind. You can't go outside. What about you?"

"We rented a red Mustang convertible from Budget and are sitting in a café. We drove out to where the road ends under a waterfall. Seventy degrees. Last song we heard on the radio was the Beach Boys."

"Cool," he said. But his heart wasn't in it. Then the call went dead.

The next day, we headed for Maui. The big news in the Honolulu Advertiser was of the shooting. Two men killed, five wounded in Honolulu in the parking lot and up at the first tee at the Pau Golf Course. Something about gambling. The golfing continued, the paper said, but cautiously.

"Jade" and "Jewel"

Man's Best Friends

Written By The Long-Suffering Wife Of The Man With The Best Friends

By Janet Berg

My girlfriends called it "Puppy Love" back in the 60s, but I sure fooled them, as my relationship with Bruce is still going strong after 40 years, including 30 years of marital bliss. It all started with our compatibility as "dog lovers." I was 15, he was 16, growing up in Massapequa (where everyone famous is from). We were just parked in the car, you know, talking, and he starts crying real tears about his "Cocoa."

"Cocoa?" my heart stops, as I frantically search under the seats of his 1960 Impala for a Styrofoam cup of hot chocolate, whose loss has obviously overwhelmed him.

"No," he continues, in garbled sobs, "Cocoa is my poodle, and he's missing." Whoa. I had never seen such sensitivity in a guy before, and so I fell instantly in love.

As it turns out, Bruce is sensitive and affectionate, all right. He schmoopies all over the place with "Jade" and "Jewel," our two golden retrievers, which leaves me feeling like an old basset hound. The dogs have turned out to be more than man's best friend; they have him trained, oh so well, wrapped around their little paws.

"Come to Daddy . . . where's my precious gems?" he calls, as he brushes right past me, a piece of cubic zirconia. The dogs zoom past me with instant halos over their heads and fixed grins on their faces. The daily greeting each night is nauseating.

Then, Bruce looks at me. "Oh, hi," and I growl.

Okay, I admit it. I'm jealous of the dogs. It's been building up over the years, but has gotten worse. The cute little nicknames, the special treats, the baby talk. My husband is dog-obsessed. He wears Big Dog t-shirts around the house, watches Animal Planet on television every night, and videos of Homeward Bound over and over again. He just can't get enough.

When my son was a little boy, he became "Duke," an imaginary dog, to get attention.

When my son was a little boy, he became "Duke," an imaginary dog, to get attention. He didn't speak much for a whole year. He was always down on all fours, and spent a lot of time under the furniture. We were concerned, but luckily, he outgrew it. He went through a lot of dog biscuits, though.

Whoever coined the phrase "It's a dog's life," must have met my dogs. Everything our family does revolves around them. It doesn't matter if WE have an empty refrigerator, my husband will ask only, "Did you feed the dogs? They look a little peckish. What about water? Do they have enough water?" And, "They look a little stiff. Did they get exercise today?"

Hasn't he noticed that my ribs are showing through my clothes lately? That my skin is dry, I'm parched, and my lips are chapped? That my left, arthritic leg has fallen asleep, and I'm limping?

"You know," he continues, as he's petting the dogs, and sniffing them, "I think they may need a grooming again." He doesn't even see me, standing across from the three of them on the rug, with static electricity in my hair.

"Sure," I curse under my breath from the kitchen, where I'm drying the dishes. I'll take them to the vet again. I cross out my appointment with the hairdresser on the calendar and fill in the words "Dog Groomer." So what if my roots make me look like a skunk, as long as the dogs smell good, look good, feel good . . .

"And their nails . . ." he doesn't skip a beat, "need a clipping." His back is to me, as the three of them look very Norman Rockwell and cozy near the fireplace. "Okay," I say, looking at my own nails that are starting to resemble ten little shovels.

"We gotta keep you two babies happy now, don't we?" he says. They're happy all right. They wag their tails so much, there's a constant breeze in the house. I have to turn the heat up. The cooing is starting to get on my nerves, and I break a glass near the sink. "Make sure you clean it up well," he yells to me, "The dogs may walk on it, and cut their feet." He doesn't take note that I'm applying a Band Aid to one of my fingers; actually, it's my middle finger. I keep raising it to show him, but he's still in dog heaven with his two angels. Speaking of which, there's a lot of talk lately whether dogs have souls or not. I don't know if they do or not, but I'm gonna eventually need a break in eternity.

Not too long ago, we moved into a new house. I made up my mind that things would be different. In fact, that's why I wanted to move in the first place. I figured, in another environment, I could change all the dog rules. The dogs will ONLY be allowed to go into one section of the house. Yes, that'll be great, less work for me. My daughter gave me one of those, "Yeah, right" looks.

In a matter of hours, after the move, she gave me one of those "I told you so" looks.

My husband broke all the rules and insisted his favorite members of the family have the run of the house. They run, all right, like a freight train headed west, straight into our canopy bed in a single leap. I even bought a very tall bed, thinking they'd never be able to jump that high. But then Bruce bought a leather bench for the foot of the bed, so the dogs have their own springboard.

Forget about romance in the marriage. It's pitiful; the four of us, almost 500 pounds of us, cramped into one bed. Of course, the dogs don't sleep at the end of the bed. They are right there in our faces, dog breath and all, while we teeter on the outer edges. They hog the blankets, sleep between us, with their heads on the pillow, wearing those silly grins. And, invariably, one of them passes gas as soon as I turn out the light.

To make matters worse, my husband has developed apnea, and the dogs have learned to snore like a human. It sounds like a symphony in bed every night, and I'm sleeping with Pavarotti and those other two guys. I haven't slept through the night since 1997. I've been through every sleep-aid device on the market, and I can tell you right now, there isn't a white noise machine loud enough to drown out the trio.

Then, there's the hairball problem. I wake up in the dark, holding onto the bed post for dear life, as I'm choking to death on the fur stuck in my throat, while my husband rolls over, and says, "Can you keep it down, you might wake up the dogs," and he rolls over and snores louder. The least they can do is synchronize the speed of their ZZZZ's.

There's no way I can win this love triangle. They're the ones with the cute, floppy ears. No wonder they're man's best friends — it's the women that have to clean up after them.

They stare us down at the dinner table, so we can't leave our plates for a second. If the phone rings, nobody dares answer it, or else they'll go without food. I wonder how people in the old days handled it. The aristocrats had dogs to show off their wealth, others used them for hunting, or to do farm work. Our dogs are totally useless.

If I hear a noise outside, I'll wake them up in the middle of the night. Tap. Tap. "Wake up, get up, girl . . . sic 'em." "Lethargic" and "Comatose," their names at these given times, lift their heads from the feather bedding, as if to say, "Oh, yeah . . . woof!"

Growing up in the 50s watching Lassie pulling the family from a burning house, I got the wrong impression. These two would leave us charbroiled, after all we've done for them.

I ask my husband, "Why, then, do we have

The Sheltered Islander By Sally Flynn

Sheltered Islander#281
The Super Bowl Cometh

One of the greatest opportunities known to womankind is rapidly approaching. The Super Bowl. This is a four-to-six-hour block of time during which a woman can change nearly everything in her life.

While the guys are munching on chips and chili and swilling beer, a woman can do things like the following.

She can clear out those awful bathroom magazines: "Hotrod," "Cigar Aficionado," and "Playboy," and replace them with modern and enlightening mags like "Building Decks and Docks," "A Ten Step Program For Cleaning Your Garage This Spring," "Showering Before Sex And Other Original Ideas To Excite Your Wife."

The Stupor Bowl is an excellent opportunity to clean out his closet. Now is the time to sneak out his old, ugly shirts and checkered pants, and replace them with the new things you bought for Christmas. Some people may argue that this a dirty, rotten, underhanded trick, to sneak out a guy's favorite things while he's a whooping idiot in the TV room — but those people are not married to your packrat.

Whatever he or his mother has given you that you hate, here is your opportunity to accidentally break it. I have a friend whose mother-in-law gave her a complete set of lovely dishes in a pattern she hated, called Desert Rose. After suffering through five holiday seasons with these dishes, she carefully packed them up to store until the next year, when she accidentally left the box behind the back wheel of a visitor's truck. It was a brilliant plan resulting in a new set of the china of her choice the following year.

On Shelter Island, the Stupor Bowl is the perfect time to search men's cars, wallets, pants, and all secret hiding places for unused ferry tickets, this island's key to freedom.

Sometimes, it is hard to get a husband to take down the outside Christmas decorations. While he is watching the game, get a rope from the garage, lasso Rudolph on the roof and pull him halfway down. The sight of Rudolph's rear hanging over the gutter will compel your man to de-Santa-fy the roof.

Do you need new kitchen cabinets ? This is your chance to loosen all the screws so the cabinets come off in his hands. How about a new dining room set? Just loosen those screws on the bolts, baby! When he sits down, you'll have that new dining room set in no time!

Did you know you can repaint a bedroom by halftime? The new curtains and linens can be in the room before he knows what hit him. And isn't that what a good relationship is all about? Learning how to change things quickly before your partner has a chance to inject his meaningless input. Any protest he can raise about the new flamingo curtains can be easily deflected by telling him that flamingos do for you what Viagra does for him.

Remember this valuable axiom: "God grant me the serenity to accept men I can not change, the wisdom to manipulate those I can and the wisdom to know the difference."

All the best.... Sally Flynn

them? Why? Why? Why?"

"Need you ask," he says, as the pair rolls their liquid brown eyes his way. "All they want is love."

"Love? Me. Me. That's what I want. Love. I want love!!!"

As usual, he doesn't hear me, sitting on the couch, with his arms around his partners. He reminds me that Valentine's Day is coming, and that he wants to get the pooches new red collars for the special occasion. I'm thinking of a box of chocolates, hoping he doesn't realize it's lethal for dogs.

I contemplate. Is there a "Mob" in the dog world? Maybe I can hire a hit dog, you know, like a pit bull, excuse me, New Yorkie, to do the job. It will be like the Valentine's Day Massacre.

What am I saying? I've gone doggone crazy.

Maybe I can just have them stuffed, and surprise my husband with the two gift boxes on February the 14th.

Big Event of the Week

OPENING AT ICEHOUSE: "UNORDINARY FORMS"

A work by Bengt Hokanson

The Icehouse Gallery and Screening Room begins its 2004 season with an intriguing group show featuring work by three local artists: David Melrose, Trefny Dix and Bengt Hokanson. David Melrose creates a unique set of experiments with living plants for this exhibit. Trefny Dix will reveal various objects in mixed mediums which are probably not quite what they seem. Bengt Hokanson is very well known for his artworks in glass. Since the late 1980s he has found inspiration in industrial objects as well as forms in nature. Show opens tonight with a reception from 4-7 p.m. and runs through February 28. Located at 414 First Street, Greenport, 477-0745.

Resveratrol: The Secret Behind Red Wine And Happy Hearts

This compound with the strange name has been very much in the news in recent years. Touted, among other things, as being an anti-oxidant and possibly reducing the incidence of coronary heart disease, it is now being credited with explaining the "French Paradox," or the low incidence of heart disease among the French, who eat a relatively high-fat diet. How do they maintain their famously low cholesterol levels while inhaling all that luscious cheese, butter and paté? Resveratrol may be the answer.

While present in foods such as peanuts and mulberries, resveratrol's most abundant natural source is Vitis Vinifera, the European species of wine grapes widely grown here on eastern Long Island. And while a certain amount of the compound is found in the vines and roots, the skins of the grapes hold the highest concentration. Hence red wines, which require the skins to be present longer during fermentation, contain more resveratrol than white wines.

How it works: Several studies have demonstrated that resveratrol is an effective antioxidant (substance that inhibits oxidation, thereby protecting cells from the damaging effects of free radicals). It inhibits lipid peroxidation (process in which unsaturated fat-soluble substances – lipids – are oxidized to form radicals capable of causing extensive tissue damage) of low-density lipoprotein (LDL, or "bad" cholesterol). And on top of this, resveratrol is being credited with inhibiting tumor promotion of certain cancers.

While all of this may sound overwhelmingly scientific, the following facts are simpler to understand. It is true that resveratrol is a component of an oriental medicine, Ko-jo-kon, used to treat diseases of the blood vessels, heart, and liver. It is probably true that resveratrol can provide more effective protection from coronary heart disease than other well-known antioxidants, such as vitamins C and E. And it is definitely true that reveratrol's long-term effects have yet to be proven.

All of this said, the French have imbibed more red wine than we have for centuries, at the same time eating a diet rich in saturated fats and maintaining low "bad" cholesterol levels. There has to be an explanation. The jury may still be out on this issue, but the findings point straight to the fact that, in moderation, consuming red wine is good for you. As they say in France, à votre santé. In other words, cheers.

I have to admit, I had to be dragged to this restaurant by insistent friends and even then it was a full year after it had opened. What can I say? My loss. I don't have a shameless explanation for this reluctance (the overwhelming hype? the press? the buzz?), but since that fateful visit last fall, I've been hooked. My only regret now is that I took so long to discover this sophisticated charmer with its ambitious menu.

Chef-owned restaurants, while often serving up superb fare, too often fall short in the "front-of-the-house" department, said co-owner Dennis McDermott. I couldn't agree more. Frisky Oyster avoids that trap with an ambience that is both Manhattan cool and country chic. The tall, upholstered banquette that surrounds the entire room is topped with padded panels in a contemporary red print, resulting in a hushed atmosphere, even on busy Saturday nights. Once seated, conversation is pleasantly easy. And the red panels have the added bonus of bathing the room in a blushing glow, a very flattering antidote to winter pallor.

The dining area at The Frisky Oyster

Added to the atmosphere is Dennis himself, a gracious host who appears to grant every customer the same attention he lavishes on friends and regulars. A cornerstone of Dennis' restaurant philosophy is "food-room-service," with none of these components taking precedence over the other. In Frisky's case, all achieve excellence and add up to a splendid dining experience.

Along with co-owner and pastry chef Hank Tomashevski, Frisky has enjoyed a very successful one-and-half years and, snow storms notwithstanding, there are no signs of business slowing down. Hank, a former personal chef of Vogue editrix Anna Wintour, not only designs the menu daily with kitchen talent Greg Ling, he also not surprisingly had a hand in the dining room's décor. Both shine, especially on a cold and blustery night here on the North Fork.

On a Friday night visit several weeks ago, David and I headed out to Greenport on the spur of the moment for a quick bite. David enjoyed the steak frites, a favorite of his and a regular on the menu. The meat here is prime and is picked up personally by the owners from Manhattan. The frites, crispy little French-style fries, are perfect on a cold night. As a first course David favors the country salad, composed primarily of frisee, for its tasty nuggets of pancetta and gorgonzola cheese.

But the standout of the evening was the mussels with fennel, red peppers, shallots, and tomatoes tossed in a spectacular sauce of orange, lime, grape and lemon juices to which Greg added a bit of fresh basil and a touch of feta cheese. This was one of best dishes I have ever tasted. The flavors were fresh and bright and the components, often muddled when so many ingredients are combined, were clearly discernable. If it appears again on the menu, don't miss it.

My entrée, short ribs seasoned with five spice powder, were also a standout. The meat was fall-from-the-bone tender and full of exotic flavors without losing its homey comfort food appeal.

Another evening found us sampling a variety of appetizers, including vegetable spring rolls, oysters with three sauces, and steak tartare. The spring rolls were the best David could remember eating (and this from someone who spent two weeks in China a few years ago), and the oysters, though not local, were excellent with the apple-cucumber and sherry vinegar-shallot sauces. The third sauce, that tasted like unadulterated soy, however, missed the mark, along with the steak tartare, which though extremely fresh, could not match the caliber of the other offerings.

For entrees we sampled the excellent and almost omni-present filet mignon, on this evening served with superb roasted fingerling potatoes and a lush red wine sauce. A hefty Vietnamese-inspired pork chop, with a tangy citrus dressing and arugula salad tossed with lime vinaigrette and cilantro, was also a home run. A whole grilled blackfish, served with cous cous and a wonderful black olive tapanade, was packed with flavor. My only quibble was the bones. There are many in blackfish, and though they are relatively easy to work around, I personally prefer my fish de-boned if not filleted. Unfortunately, the striped bass fillet, an excellent pick on that first visit in fall, was sold out by the time we arrived. This evening's preparation of pan-searing with clams, chorizo and potatoes sounded delicious.

Desserts are worth the calories. Try the chocolate soufflé cake if offered, or my favorite, the chocolate pot de crème. This last is a chic version of warm chocolate pudding.

The wine list is thoughtful and even a little whimsical (Cockfighters Ghost from Australia?), and features a number of Long Island entries. But the focus is not on Long Island and I for one do NOT find anything wrong with this. Many local restaurants feature local wines, and that's fine, but I do not see it as a prerequisite. Interesting by the glass features recently included Monte Xanic Sauvignon Blanc-Semillon from Mexico and Passomaggio Nero d'Avola from Sicily.

I refer to Frisky Oyster's menu as ambitious because there are occasionally a few near misses among the many hits. This is not a criticism. It is a welcome indication that the youthful kitchen is willing to take chances and experiment while finding its culinary way. The misses, I will also note, are not the result of combining too many disparate ingredients, an amateurish practice all too often encountered these days.

So while it took me too long to walk through the door of this storefront beauty, I have made up for lost time. Just goes to show you still can't judge a book by its cover. Or a restaurant by its hype. "Once you take the bravado out, it becomes genuine," said Dennis. How true.

Press Conference And Protest

Citizens are invited to the steps of Southampton Town Hall on Friday, January 23 at 10 a.m to join with local architects and preservationists expected to show up for a protest against the possibility of tearing down the 24,000 square foot manor house on the property of the proposed Bayberry Land golf course in Shinnecock Hills.

The mansion, built in 1919 by Cross and Cross (builders of Tiffany's on Fifth Avenue) is one of the last remaining examples of this design style, and contains original Tiffany glass windows. According to Eva Growney, a member of the Preservation Committee for the East End section of American Institute of Architects (the AIA) the property has not been maintained the way it should have been, but holds historical value and should not be destroyed to make room for a new clubhouse.

Growney explains that the press conference is scheduled at this time because the entire Southampton Town Board will be attending their Brown Bag meeting in offices right above the steps. She believes that Southampton Supervisor Patrick Heaney is not doing his public service on the issue – he has already made a decision on the fate of Bayberry, but the public hearings are still open.

Away At School . . . By David Lion Rattiner

Life

I have always liked that line in the movie Ferris Bueller's Day Off, when Matthew Broderick says, "Life moves by pretty fast, if you don't stop and look around every once in a while, you could miss it."

Lately, I have been thinking about what he was talking about. When you think about it, life does move really fast. I can remember so easily, it feels like it was yesterday, walking to the bus stop and freaking out about "freshman beat up day" at East Hampton High School. I was walking around the halls terrified, wondering if I was going to be duct taped and dragged into the gymnasium to be put on display in front of the whole school. I never even thought about college. I can remember thinking that college was light years away, that it would never actually happen. I thought of college the same way I think about having kids or getting married. This was something that was so far away it wasn't even worth thinking about!

A blink went by, another blink went by, and I graduated high school, went to college and now am within one year of graduating. Next year, I will be a senior at Northeastern University, probably graduating early, with a finance degree and a minor in international business.

This is absolutely crazy to me. I never really dreamed about majoring in finance. It just sort of happened. I dreamed about being a movie star, a news reporter, a rock star, a gazillionare, and a world famous writer. Stuff like that.

When I was a freshman in college, I knew that I needed to make money so I was like, why not finance? That makes sense, there is money there, right?

The closer I get to graduating, the more often I'm talking to my old friends from high school, really just to research what sounds good and what sounds bad. "I'm thinking about traveling in Europe for a year. Then I'll figure it out from there." "I'm thinking about taking a year off." (What the hell does this mean?) "I think I'm going to move to (insert either Miami, San Francisco, Los Angeles, or New York City) and work in the (insert college major here) business." A lot of my friends are getting depressed about the future and its uncertainty and how they are not famous rock stars yet like the rest of the world.

The more I think about it, the clearer it is to me that life is not all about the pursuit of money, but more about the pursuit of happiness. Some people really have happiness figured out, I think. My Dad is somebody that has that kind of under control. I like that a lot about him and do everything I can to copy it. You do what you enjoy, but you find enjoyment out of the hard stuff that you do, too, the stuff that you don't really want to do, but when you do it, you feel good.

Of course I want the dream. I want a nice car, I want a house, I want to be married with two kids, and I want a job that I enjoy and am respected for having. And I've got to do what I can to get that.

I want to talk about money for a second. I think that life is a lot about money. I think that it is important to work and to contribute to society and to do the right thing. But I think the real thing that makes you happy are the friends that you make and how comfortable you are with yourself and how confident you are with your abilities.

MTV has been doing this show called "Rich Girls" which is about these two girls that are ridiculously rich and young. One of them seems like she is pretty happy, but the other one is obviously depressed and obviously unhappy. It is so weird to think and see someone whose parents have practically an unlimited amount of wealth, yet she is still really down about life. You look at her and think what does she have to be down about?

In a way, MTV is doing a favor to society by showing us that money doesn't buy happiness.

I am of the opinion that happiness comes from feeling good about yourself and who you are. I think happiness comes from people feeling good when they are around you. I think happiness comes from not being jealous of other people who appear to be happy and successful, but being happy for them that they are doing well.

But people are weird, you know? It's like no matter what you have, you feel like you want something else. You have to really think about what it is that you do have and not what you wish you could have.

If you are reading this newspaper, you probably are doing pretty good and you should take my advice and be happy. You probably have a place to sleep, enough to eat, and somebody that loves you. Life is effffing great. It is so great to be alive. It is so great to be here on this planet, sharing my thoughts with you, on my laptop, in my Boston pad, on a late Sunday night, knowing that Martin Luther King Day is tomorrow.

I freaked out yesterday about my brother. I got a voice mail from my mom telling me that he had been in a car accident. That was it. For about a minute I thought the worst. I thought it was possible that he was dead. I called my brother on his cell phone, he told me about it, it ended up not being a big deal, he is fine. But when I thought about it, that could have been a different phone call. Life could have simply turned another way. It could have been a totally different story.

I got an adrenaline rush in the middle of our conversation, and told my brother how awesome he is. How amazing it is to have a brother and a cool one

Winter Sales Guide

West Joins East For Winter Handknit Fashion

The word is out that fasionistas' and hipsters are knitting as feverishly as ever. But what of the aspiring knitter on the sidelines, who may not know where to start, what to buy or how to sift through cryptic instruction books? Brooklyn Handknit, which become renowned the world over for the highest quality hand-knit clothing and accessories, solves this uncertainty with the introduction of their "Knit Kit" – a stylish bag complete with all the necessary knitting accoutrements for any beginner or expert. It includes a skein of signature Brooklyn Handknit hand-dyed wool yarn and beautiful bamboo knitting needles nestled inside a handmade bamboo handle tote bag. Lined with special pockets are designed to keep needles organized, the bag also offers straightforward, step-by-step instructions tucked inside a clear outer sleeve for the simple "Knit in Your Sleep...Garter Stitch Scarf." Retail prices are $65 for simple canvas kits and $75 for a camouflage version. The "Knit Kit" is also available at 199 Bedford Avenue, Brooklyn and online at: www.brooklynhandknit.com.

Brooklyn Handknit, Southampton

Brooklyn Handknit, located at 29 Main Street in Southampton, has just finished its most successful Fall/Winter season ever, and its first as a wholly independent label with all of its sales and marketing efforts done in-house. The shop has been featured in In Style and Vogue Knitting.

The Southampton store features the Brooklyn Handknit clothing and accessories line, as well as other thoughtfully selected items that please the senses. Moderately priced, high end goods are displayed in an airy and organized style, including Brooklyn Handknit winter accessories, ponchos, lamps of steel and vellum-printed photographs, jewelry, elegant ceramic vases, silk buckwheat pillows, aromatic candles, leather wallets, letter-press stationery, children's wooden puzzles and a variety of other items can be had for up to 40% off. A story unfolds as one browses through the handsomely designed space.

A classic accessory that is perfect for gift giving or to keep for yourself is their famous dog icon that adorned their Spring/Summer T-shirts. It is now making its presence felt on a toasty scarf and mittens in brown, blue and grey. Mittens ($68) on sale online for $44, and scarf ($76) is now $49.

The store will be clearing out all remaining merchandise through January 29, and will re-open on April 15 with fresh Spring/Summer merchandise, including the latest from London-based designer Orla Kiely, as well as Brooklyn Handknit Spring/Summer alpaca and embroidered cotton ponchos in custom-dyed pastels.

The Southampton location has been an effective flag-ship retail shop for the wholesale line, which is embraced season after season by a faithful clientele across Europe, North America and Japan including Barney's, Bergdorf Goodman, Takishimaya and Saks Fifth Avenue. Janis Stemmermann, Brooklyn Handknit's creator and designer is becoming known as the "re-inventor" of high end knitting in the fashion industry. Janis has also finished and sent to production the design of the Spring/Summer 2004 line of ponchos and summer wraps, all done in hand dyed alpaca and embroidered cotton. The colors were formulated by Janis herself and the cotton and alpaca will be dyed and knit by her production team in Nepal, making Brooklyn Handknit products the freshest and most exciting on the knitwear market. The cotton group is an exciting new development with embroidered floral patterns done in hand dyed cotton, perfect for beach and party going in the Hamptons.

Liz Haverty, a partner, will be leading a new program for the company, developed in the fall of 2003 to take Brooklyn Handknit products "on the road." She has scheduled Brooklyn Handknit Trunk Shows in Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Texas, Montana, California and Oregon among others, every week for the next four months. Customers will be able to buy Fall/Winter 2003 products at a 40% discount and will have a 20% discount on the new Spring/Summer 2004 offering.

Clear counterpoints to the dry banality of contemporary throw-away trends, the Southampton location and its sister store Spacial Etc., located in Williamsburg, Brooklyn, strike a chord that resonates with both the organic and the refined...They are a welcome respite from impersonal brands that characterized the retail scene in the city, imbued with love for beautiful objects, featuring a tasteful and delightful aesthetic that has become the signature feature of the Brooklyn Handknit/Spacial Etc. family of enterprises.

So put on your warm jacket, hat, boots and gloves and start shopping at this Southampton shop, and reap the sales of winter. Maybe even learn to knit your own.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

The Animal Rescue Fund of the Hamptons, Inc. (ARF) needs dog houses to distribute to needy families to help keep outdoor dogs and cats warm. During these extremely cold winter days, it is advisable to keep your pets indoors. But, if you have to keep your pets outside, you must provide them with shelter. A dog house with straw bedding is ideal. If you have a dog house to donate to ARF, please call 537-0400 ext. 201. Thanks!

When In Manhattan...

Outsider Art Fair

Collecting art is serious business for many residents of the Hamptons. It's not uncommon to visit a friend's home and find the likes of Willem De Kooning, Chagall, Matisse, or Picasso hanging on their walls. Recently, Outsider Art, the visionary, the self-taught, intuitive, or "art brut," has gained popularity, but may not have found its niche along our shores. The work is different, perhaps a bit tough, but it carries conviction. There are no frauds here. The outsider artists generally never meant to be artists in the first place. That's the difference between a Henry Darger and a Jean Michel Basquiat. Basquiat, in the 80s, used graffiti and symbols to create his own version of "art brut" by never trying to paint beyond his limitations. But he knew what he was doing and he had ambition. With the art market being so frantic at the time, dealers scooped him up. Basquiat churned out hundreds of paintings, and died a junkie and an art star in 1988. He was 27. Darger, on the other hand, died alone at 81, and his massive life's work was only discovered when the landlord cleaned out his tiny Chicago apartment. This man, who had been in an asylum as a child and lived the end of his life barely scratching by on social security, knew nothing of art. He created hundreds of watercolors to accompany his unfinished 19,000-page book written in longhand, called Realms of the Unreal. The book detailed a fantasy battle between child-enslaving Glanelinians, and the 7 Vivian sisters from Abbiennia. It is crazy. It is beyond imaginative. It was his obsession. It was all he did. He asked for nothing. He showed it to no one. This is what outsider art is all about.

Darger's work has been displayed by The American Folk Art Museum in the past, and the shows were nothing but fantastic. This weekend, Sanford I. Smith and Associates are producing the 12th Annual Outsider Art Fair, with a preview to benefit The American Folk Art Museum. The fair will feature over 30 exhibitors from the United States, Europe, and Canada, and has been hailed as "one of New York's hippest and best contemporary art fairs." Roberta Smith of The New York Times, described the Outsider Art Fair as "phenomenally successful" and noted that each January "...the fair attracts dealers, collectors, artists and art lovers from the world over and inspires exhibitions around town." Chicago's Carl Hammer Gallery will represent Darger's work, as will New York's Galerie St. Etienne, who will also feature Grandma Moses, but there are many lesser-known outsiders, past and present, that are worth the trip to the city.

Creative Growth Art Center, from Oakland, CA provides creative art programs to physically, mentally and emotionally disabled adults, and will debut at the Outsider Art Fair this year. Also of note is the Barbara Archer Gallery from Georgia, representing several artists including Sam Doyle, from the island of St. Helena, off the coast of South Carolina. Doyle's paintings use common house paints and roofing materials, and gravitate toward religious iconography. It is a must see. He was born in 1906, and spent his life on the island, leaving only a couple of times, including one trip to Washington D.C. for a Black Folk Artists show at the Corcoran in 1982. East Hampton's own eccentric, Norman Brosterman, will also be included. There are so many great, unadulterated talents at this fair that the list could go on and on. It would be better to see it for yourself.

The 12th Annual Outsider Art Fair runs from January 23rd to the 25th at the Puck Building on Lafayette and Houston, with benefit preview on January 22nd from 6:30-9pm. Tickets for the fair are $15 daily, and $35 for a three day pass. The benefit is $150, and includes one readmission and catalog. Check www.sanfordsmith.com for complete event schedule and exhibition listings.

UTA HAGEN, 1919-2004

Legendary actress Uta Hagen died at her home in Manhattan last Thursday at the age of 84. Ms. Hagen was born in Germany and moved to the United States with her family when she was seven. Ms. Hagen had a vacation residence in Montauk at the time of her death. She lived here more than 40 years and was reported to have been largely responsible for Edward Albee moving to Montauk in the early 1960s. She was well-known in town.

Ms. Hagen attended London's Royal Academy of Dramatic Art and the University of Wisconsin before she began her acting career. Ms. Hagen was named one of the 100 Greatest Stage Actors of the Century in 1999 by In Theater magazine. Her stage credits include The Seagull, in which she starred with Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne; she also received praise for her work in Othello, co-starring Paul Robeson and her first husband Jose´ Ferrer. In A Streetcar Named Desire Hagen portrayed Blanche DuBois, replacing Jessica Tandy, and Ms. Hagen's memorable role as Martha in Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf? is still being hailed to this day.

After her marriage to Ferrer, she was married to Herbert Berghof, the well-known drama teacher who ran the Herbert Berghof Studio. Berghof died in 1990.

In 1999, Ms. Hagen received a Special Lifetime Achievement Tony in addition to her two Tony Awards for her work in Virginia Woolf and The Country Girl. Ms. Hagen also added teaching to her repertoire. She wrote two books, Respect for Acting and A Challenge for the Actor, that are considered a must read among aspiring actors.

Ms. Hagen's last stage performance was in 2001 at The Geffen Playhouse in Los Angeles. She appeared with David Hyde Pierce in the two-character play by Richard Alfieri entitled Six Dance Lessons in Six Weeks. The success of the play brought plans to move the production to Broadway until Uta suffered a stroke.

Uta Hagen is survived by her daughter, Letitia Ferrer, a granddaughter and a great granddaughter.

at that. People write movies about brothers.

That's the real thing in life. That's the thing that matters a lot. You can't put a word on it, somebody should invent a word for it. Those moments, that feeling, the tingle in your back after watching a great movie.

Sure, I'm going to graduate next year. Maybe I'll work in New York City in finance, maybe I'll travel, maybe I'll work at Dan's Papers if they let me, I mean who the hell knows? I'll always write no matter what, I'll always run no matter what, I'll always love my family and care about the world no matter what. Whatever it is, it is going to happen. The time will move and I'll be older and I'll be somewhere. The important thing however is that I realize that I am here, right now, I am here, and that life moves by pretty fast. If I don't stop to look around once in a while, I could miss it.

ART COMMENTARY By Marion Wolberg Weiss

LOOKING AHEAD: THE 2004 NEW YORK ART SCENE

Recent "Art Commentaries" took a glance back at both the East End and Manhattan art scenes, so not look ahead to some possible trends? An impossible job, we realize, but challenging, nonetheless.

Where to start? Perhaps with the most salient and current aesthetic problem now facing New York: both the rebuilding of the World Trade Center and the design for the memorial to those who died there. In a nutshell, consideration of design and space and their impact on varied art forms, albeit smaller endeavors than the Twin Towers.

Space comes in many sizes and shapes, serving diverse aesthetic purposes. Let's consider the most obvious one in the visual arts: a gallery. Keeping with the Postmodern Age, however, we know that multiple functions are not only popular but also a necessity where space is at a premium. A good example is Mixed Greens, a Chelsea venue situated high above the normally congested streets, overlooking the Hudson River and a spectacular skyline. Thus, Mixed Greens transcends horizontal space, replacing it with a vertical sphere instead.

But that's not the real point. Rather, Mixed Greens represents a hybrid ("mixed") venue that effectively combines commerce and art. While work hangs on its walls, the space is also an office where business is carried out. People, therefore, can experience art on the company's website and/or at its Chelsea domain.

And what about the art? It's subtle and tasteful (Pardon the pun: the current photography exhibit features French fries by Lee Stoetzel, but you'd never know it. The black and white abstract forms could be the Grand Canyon or magical outcroppings. Negative space is also an arresting quality.)

Other non-obvious works by Julianne Swartz celebrate space in their own way: projected movement and optical illusion integrated extremely well among Mixed Green's work spaces.

The exhibit at the New Museum featuring Trisha Brown's collaboration with artists like Robert Rauschenberg represents another Postmodern approach to space: a combination of movement, sets and costumes. The stage becomes an extended canvas, as do Donald Judd's moving backdrops, which become a choreographic element as well. Ms. Brown, in fact, may be one of the first dancers to appreciate the space's power. Her performances on New York rooftops in the 1960s proved the point.

Work by Lee Stoetzel will be on view at Mixed Greens (601 W. 26th St. until Feb. 7. Website: mixedgreens. com/gallery.

Honoring the Artist: Cuca Romley

It is cold outside; six inches of snow lie on the ground. The wind howls with a fierceness that makes you think you are living in Alaska. But it isn't Alaska, merely Sag Harbor. Unfortunately, these winter weather conditions are becoming all too familliar to East Enders.

Inside artist Cuca Romley's row house on Main Street, however, is an entirely different story. It is warm and comfy with twinkling lights and hot tea to welcome guests. The delicate smell of fresh lillies permeates the entire space. Other senses are engaged, including the art works hanging on the walls and the beautifully crafted furnishings and jewelry inhabiting the rooms.

What's a bit unusual is that they are all created by Ms. Romley. Also unique is the isolated country - like setting, despite the fact that her home fronts Main Street with all its energy and action. What's even more special is that her residence is also a gallery (the Winter Tree) where she exhibits other artists' work. (The current show features black and white prints.) Such a venue is not so special for Ms. Romley, however, considering the lovely studio/gallery she had in New York.

So how did Ms. Romley end up in Sag Harbor anyway? If you know this Spanish- born, well - educated woman, the answer is simple. She loves to travel, and travel she did, going from Madrid to Paris to spend a month's vacation and staying for several years instead.

Then it was off to New York, with forays to the Hamptons during the late 1970s. Three Manhattan apartments later, Ms. Romley found a perfect place in Sag Harbor.

Ms. Romley's own art reflects these varied living experiences: using a "primitive" style, her pieces capture the charmng aspects of New York (for example, Central Park and Tavern on the Green) and East Hampton (the Town Pond).

But there's another side to Ms. Romley's art which contradicts her more objective, whimsical style. Some pieces occupy her bedroom (images of her daughter) and another (a vibrant abstract work of the Grand Canyon which catches the colors of fruit laying on the table) serves as a backdrop to a kitchen nook.

All of Ms. Romley's works are incorporated so well, in fact, that the whole interior resembles an installation.

Installation or not, it's a great place to spend a cold winter day.

Big Fish

Life was a box of chocolates for Forrest Gump, the fantasy review of a life that was sweet, bittersweet and carelessly filled with historical fudging. In the current biographic fantasy, Big Fish, the candy melange of squishy cream stuffings seem laced with hallucinatory liqueurs that produce dream-like, fairy-tale adventures that dwarf Pee Wee's Big Adventure, and dull the sharp perversity of Edward Scissorhands, earlier oddball-elfin films directed by Tim Burton. His Big Fish is a whopper of imaginative storytelling, comparable to the very tall stories told by its central character, Edward Bloom. Dying, he repeats and embellishes further the fantastic stories he'd been telling for years – enough to drive his son away. Now near the end, Bloom, in the person of Albert Finney playing the old Southerner with big-stage, Big Daddy drawls and patronizing affection and arrogance, gives his son the grand finale retrospective of probable lies, covering a countless number of extravagant experiences, including the title yarn: the ultimate fishy fish story. The son, Will, suitably sullenly done by Billy Crudup, has been called back from Paris where he is a news agency reporter another big division between the two. The son is devoted to the accurate, unmitigated truth whereas the father has been fabulizing the truth, which is that he's a traveling salesman of kitchen gadgets, mostly far from their Alabama home. Is he to be faulted for entertaining optimistically? Or is it the truth? After all, before he became a cranky, cantankerous grump he was this attractive irrepressible and happy youth, now portrayed by another Brit, Ewan McGregor, who tumbles through the incredible adventures swellegantly.

Edward's early years set him up for life. He meets a witch, Helena Bonham Carter, who wears a glass eye that foretells his death, allowing him the freedom of a long, known life. This gives him the ability to stand up to a 10 foot Giant who might devour his charming small town of Ashton, Ala. After all, it is the 1950s, anything is likely in that time warp period. Is it? You get the idea by now of the movie's skewed direction, which was set by Daniel Wallace's novel. On his strange path, which includes streets paved with grass and a campus quadrangle flooded with daffodils, he's seen by the lovely he will marry, Allison Lohman, who will age beautifully into Jessica Lange. Among his other enchantments, Edward joins a circus headed by a monstrous Danny DeVito. The scary Into the Woods experiences soon become overly softened by warm, warm sentimentality – a sunny four decades in a South as pristine and colorless as the current epic of the South's Civil War Cold Mountain that's cleansed of African-Americans. Big Fish's box of exotic bonbons sits in the comforting sun too long. What starts out as a tantalizing surprise with every bite eventually melts down into a toothless goop that makes you want to cry. The father-son relationship (yes, yet another) heats up to a flaccid, cozy-warm acceptance of Dad as a grand old, bender-of-the-truth, spirited wonder man – when we in the audience know he's an incorrigible liar. Even crocodile-sized tears can't blur that.

So gentle readers, you will be left to decide if a family can live happily ever after, after 40 years of bragging "stretchers," passed out as storytelling. Some drama might have been extended with a reason or two for his dependency on his drug of choice. Tim Burton's intoxicating, hand-dipped sweets have, in the past, left us with a haunting after-taste of deviltry – a tangy memory of off-center thoughtfulness and crisp memorability. His wet, wild and tearful Big Fish left us with a damp handkerchief. Remarkably like Forrest Gump, uncannily forgettable. Have you seen Gump recently? Or have you forgotten?

Theatre Review: taboo... by gordin & christiano

Taboo, the Broadway musical produced by Rosie O'Donnell and now playing at the Plymouth Theatre, has unfortunately posted its closing notice. The new musical, a portrait of the London club scene in the early 1980s has been running in the red since it opened on November 13th, and now, barring a miracle or some last minute intervention, the show will end on February 8th. That being said my advice is to rush over to the Plymouth Theatre and see for yourself what all the fuss has been about. The lavish production is an immensely entertaining event, which demands to be seen. No doubt the show will go down in the annals of Broadway musical theatre lore as an ambitious failure that will be discussed for decades. I saw the musical just after it opened and the audience I attended with was having a raucous good time despite the show's shortcomings.

Ms. O'Donnell is larger than life and as a result, the troubled production has been tabloid fodder since its inception. Much has been written about her struggles to mount the original musical, based on a concept by Boy George, with Christopher Renshaw, the show's director. Boasting music and lyrics by Boy George, the London production, also directed by Mr. Renshaw with a book by Mark Davies, ran successfully for 15 months in a smaller venue. Now bankrolled by Rosie O'Donnell to the tune of $10 million dollars (where does the press get these numbers from?) the show is not nearly as bad as most of the reviewers have indicated, but it is also not nearly as good as it could have been. Ms. O'Donnell has said doing the show was the best time of her life. Well, I should hope so! If she can't have an exceptionally good time spending $10 million dollars producing a musical played out against the fantastic background of Taboo, the club that has come to symbolize the mad excess and decadent fun of the 1980s London club scene, then something is definitely wrong. However, having a good time is not the only operative to producing a successful Broadway musical and even though many of the principals, indeed, do seem to be having a grand ol' time, the story about George O'Dowd's (a.k.a. Boy George) rise to fame remains a disjointed hodgepodge.

The new book by the talented writer and performer Charles Busch focuses not only on Boy George, but also Leigh Bowery, a little known performance artist (played by George O'Dowd a.k.a. Boy George) and his influence on the young Boy George. There are also the stories of their friends that keep your head spinning. There are the rivals for Bowery's attention – Nicola, his lost waif assistant (ultimately his wife) and Big Sue, his fag-hag best friend. Then we have Boy George's best friend the mean-spirited drag queen Marilyn, who longs to be famous too, and Boy George's just-out-of-the-closet-but-still- conflicted lover, the photographer Marcus. If this isn't enough to confuse you, there is also our host for the evening, Philip, played with a fiendish intensity by Raul Esparza in a tattered evening gown. Philip leads us back in time to the good old days of club Taboo and quotes Jean Cocteau "Cultivate whatever people condemn you for, because that's what's truly original about you," as the anthem of the scene. Now just whose story is it? The balance seems to tip in Leigh Bowery's favor with his death scene, as a montage of photos from the real Leigh Bowery's life is projected on a huge screen.

What's most disconcerting about the story is that these two men (Boy George and Bowery), who knew each other in real life, never meet. Rumor has it that Mr. Busch did write a scene where the two men meet at Leigh Bowery's death bed, but that George O'Dowd, a.k.a. Boy George, lacked the acting skills to portray what was written, the result being that Christopher Renshaw cut what could have been a pivotal scene.

Euan Morton as the young Boy George displays a combination of bravado and fragility which captures the young man most convincingly. In fact, all the actors are quite good, with George O'Dowd the most limited of the cast. He plays Bowery pretty much on one level, rendering him a self-centered egomaniac, whom it is difficult to care about. His death from AIDS is hollow and unmoving, and herein lies a problem.

The characters come off as shallow, self-indulgent, drug-addicted freaks, with whom the audience, as voyeurs, can feel little empathy with. Sue McCartney, who played Big Sue with a heart of gold, was an exception, exhibiting a vulnerability and determination that was at once winning and moving. Her powerhouse singing was sensational, manifesting pained nuances that are particularly captivating. She, however, had to leave the show early in the run due to her pregnancy and was replaced by Brooke Elliott.

The costumes by Mike Nicholls are inspired and zany, as is the make-up by Christine Bateman. The score by Boy George is the best part of the evening with some songs more catchy than others, but they fail for the most part to move the action, and do little to develop the characters further, existing merely for entertainment. Some of the more successful are "Do You Really Want to Hurt Me," "Ich Bin Kunst," and "Out of Fashion."

A thrilling evening it isn't, but for a fabulously strident good time, a giggle and all the gossip, I highly recommend Taboo, not for what it isn't, but exactly for what it is: a celebration of a group of freaks who captured the essence of a time long gone by, but which is still very much emulated today by the lost and disillusioned.

Taboo is now playing on Broadway at The Plymouth Theatre (236 West 45th Street). For ticket information call 212-239-6200

SLIDING ALL OVER THE ROADS, EXPLAINED

By Dan Rattiner

Both East and Southampton Town have been having a very difficult time trying to find rock salt to put down on the roads in the Hamptons. The situation is still critical in East Hampton where there simply isn't any salt at all. The only way the ice on the roads is going to go away is for the sun to warm it and melt it off. This might take a week, given the current weather forecast. It is a situation that is unique in this community in recent years. Drive very, very carefully.

According to Chris Russo, the Superintendent of Highways in East Hampton, the situation has come about because of a bureaucratic mix-up. Last winter, there were many snow storms and practically all the bins of rock salt were used up. During the spring and summer of 2003, the Town Board could have bought new supplies to prepare for the winter of 2003-2004, but they simply didn't put the funding for it in the budget, choosing instead to wait for the arrival of a check from the federal agency FEMA. FEMA had promised financial relief because of the big blizzard in February 2003.

But the check never arrived. And so, by autumn, there was not only very little rock salt, there was no funding available. It snowed just before Thanksgiving, and then it snowed again. And now there is no rock salt on the roads.

The thing is, however, there is now plenty of money in the 2004 budget with which to buy the stuff. But the rock salt is nowhere to be had.

"All the rock salt for the Northeast comes from India and is unloaded at two locations, one on Staten Island, the other at Red Hook, Brooklyn," Russo said. "Guess what? With the current snow, everybody in the whole Northeast went to get the rock salt for their community, and they cleaned it out. Connecticut, Rockland County, North Jersey, Westchester. There are very low supplies now and very little prospect of new supplies anytime soon."

Southampton Town, according to Bill Masterson, the Superintendent, did get their rock salt. At first, he found supplies were hard to get. But then, he started doing a lot of yelling. And he kept on yelling until he found somebody who would sell Southampton some rock salt.

"I had to get hold of the CEO of International Salt to get it," he said. "But we received 800 tons this past Thursday and ordered another 1000 tons to arrive before the end of this week."

He did say that early on there were delays, one, because the weather forecast did not include snow, which meant they ordered late, and two, because the trucking company they hired to bring out the salt got delayed. But it's here now.

Be very careful how you drive, especially in East Hampton Town and especially where there are bends in the road. 15 miles an hour is a good speed.

Why don't they go down to the beach and just get some sand?

ADAM SMITH AT WOOSTER ARTS SPACE

East Hampton artist Adam Smith, husband of Dan's Papers Managing Editor Robin F. Smith, is featured in a group show at Wooster Arts Space. A tremendous turnout of art patrons braved the frigid temperatures, recorded at –30 degrees (with wind chill) to attend the opening reception at the Soho gallery, including many of those who work for Dan's. The exhibit continues through February 14.

Silvia Lehrer's Cooking Column

Okay! So what do the meat and potato people do about the current search for safer beef? Yes, of course we are concerned after the discovery of mad cow disease in Washington State back in December. Apparently the protein "prion" that is thought to cause the disease in cows has never been found in solid muscle meat such as roasts, steaks and other solid cuts that we are likely to eat. Commercial ground beef, on the other hand, contains meat from many animals along with crushed spinal columns and other bones. The spinal column, thought to be a most likely source of mad cow disease, is supposed to be removed. Although the Department of Agriculture states that any beef that carries its seal is safe to eat, it pays to be cautious.

Chop meat for hamburgers, meatballs, chili, etc is a personal concern. Making your own ground beef at home is not only safer than using packaged hamburger meat, it is easily chopped in a food processor using the steel knife. Cut up a solid piece of beef into 1/4-inch cubes and process for no more than 7 seconds or you will break down the tendons and have mush.

I'm not making any claims to being a knowledgeable butcher but I have learned a thing or two over the years. I recently purchased a fine-looking beef chuck steak, blade bone in, at a local supermarket. After I carefully looked through the different packages I found one that consisted of the rib-like chuck steak against the bone, and a full size minute steak separated by a well-marbled center portion. Its net weight of 2.21 pounds at $1.39 per pound cost $3.07. I divided the sections by scraping against the bone with a sharp boning knife. A good slicing knife would work as well. I cut the center portion to grind for meatballs, used the rib-like steak to braise in a bean stew and cut the minute steak into strips for a stir-fry. Lots of value for my $3.07.

Meatballs With Mushrooms And Linguini

Making your own ground beef at home is safer than using packaged hamburger meat.
Serve 4-5

For the meatballs and mushrooms

3/4 pound ground beef
1 egg, beaten
1 large clove garlic, finely chopped
2-3 tablespoons chopped flat-leaf Italian parsley
Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper
3-4 tablespoons plain, dry breadcrumbs
2 tablespoons canola oil
2 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
1 medium onion, finely chopped
1/2 pound button mushrooms, trimmed and wiped clean
1/2 cup chicken broth or pasta cooking water

For the pasta

1 pound linguini
Coarse salt for the cooking water
Parsley leaves for garnish, optional

1. Mix the first six ingredients in a bowl. With wet hands shape into even-sized meatballs. Warm the canola oil in a large skillet and saute the meatballs over medium heat, a few at time, (do not crowd pan) about 2 minutes each side. Transfer to a side dish.

2. Warm the olive oil in the same skillet the meatballs cooked in and saute chopped onions for 3-4 minutes until translucent. Put in the mushrooms and saute over medium-high heat for 4-5 minutes. Add the stock if using and season with salt and pepper to taste. Add meatballs to the mushrooms and keep warm over low heat.

3. Meanwhile, bring a large pot of water to the boil, add salt and put in the pasta. Cover and return water to the boil. Uncover and cook the pasta at a brisk rolling boil for 9-11 minutes or al dente, firm to the bite. If using cooking water for the meatballs and mushrooms, scoop out 1/2 cup before draining the pasta. Drain pasta in a colander and return to the pot it cooked in. Pour over the meatballs and mushrooms and toss carefully to mix. Ladle into warm pasta bowls, garnish with parsley leaves and serve at once.

Stir-Fried Beefsteak With Vegetables

This is a basic stir-fry. Any firm vegetable, such as Bok Choy, broccoli stems, snow pea pods and/or water chestnuts can be used in place of or addition to peppers.
Serves 4

1/2 pound flank or minute steak

For the marinade

1 tablespoon Sherry or Chinese rice wine
1 tablespoon light soy sauce
1/2 teaspoon sugar
2 teaspoons cornstarch
Freshly ground pepper to taste

For the vegetables

4 tablespoons corn or peanut oil
2 red bell peppers, trimmed and cut into 1-inch cubes
1/2 teaspoon salt
1 clove garlic, crushed
1-2 tablespoons water
1 tablespoon soy sauce
1/2 teaspoon dark sesame oil

1. Trim meat of any excess fat or gristle. Freeze the meat in zip-lock for 20-30 minutes for easy slicing. Cut meat across the grain with a sharp knife to about 2' x 1/2' slices. Prepare marinade ingredients in a bowl and stir in the meat. Can marinate for several hours ahead, refrigerated. Bring to room temperature before cooking.

2. Meanwhile heat 2 tablespoons oil in wok or large skillet, add peppers and stir fry over medium-high heat for a few seconds. Season with salt and continue to stir fry until pepper skin blisters. Add a little water, cover wok or skillet and cook for a minute or so until peppers are tender yet crisp and juicy. Transfer to a side dish.

3. Wipe pan clean that peppers cooked in and when thoroughly dry add 3 tablespoons oil and then the garlic. When oil is hot (slight haze will appear on the surface) and the garlic is golden, quickly put in the meat and stir-fry until the meat loses its red color. Return vegetable to the pan, stir to mix and season with additional soy and sesame oil. Mix again and serve immediately over cooked white rice. Remove garlic or leave in as you wish.

Dining In The Hamptons

Southampton Publick House

40 Bowden Square, Southampton
631-283-2800

There's nothing like an ice cold beer and a great burger. We all have our favorite places we frequent to fill that craving, and the Southampton Publick House should be at the top of our list. Established in 1996 as the first micro-brewery restaurant on the East End of Long Island, this hot spot has grown in popularity over the years. Owners Donald, Kevin and Jim Sullivan recruited renowned Brewmaster Phil Markowski to attain their goal of creating the best brew house restaurant on Long Island.

My friend Lyz and I were out to celebrate her last day in the Hamptons before she moved to Connecticut. We met at the grand bar for a quick beer before sitting down for dinner. The Southampton Publick House is spacious, and allows guests to feel comfortable (even on those busy summer nights). The atmosphere has a casual and relaxing appeal that makes for a great gathering place to mingle.

After Lyz and I finished our drink at the bar, we moved into the dining room. We decided to start with an assortment of appetizers that included crisp beer battered shrimp, jalapeno poppers and mozzarella sticks served with dipping sauce. Unfortunately for my waistline, I love to indulge in fried foods periodically. If you like the taste of Buffalo wings without the mess, try Buffalo chicken strips. These crunchy treats are flavorful, with a rich homemade chunky blue cheese dressing for added sinfulness.

At this point, one might imagine that we had had enough to eat, but not us, with our "Super Model" appetites. Bring it on! And there it was, my 14 oz boneless ribeye and my friend's baby back ribs. My steak was tender and served with a side of creamy garlic mashed potatoes and grilled veggies. The baby back ribs were sweet and a bit messy, but I guess that's what makes them enjoyable to eat. Warning: Not recommended to eat on a first date. Actually, maybe you should wait until the ring is on your finger.

As we continued with our meal, our waitress Jen brought over a tray of brew samples. Served in adorable mini glasses were ten different samples of beer. We didn't know where to begin so we each randomly picked one. I started with the Belgian Amber Ale and Lyz with the Nut Brown Ale. Each brew was distinctly different and some were stronger than others. My personal favorites were the Publick House Porter and the Golden Lager. I'm not one for strong tasting "heavy" beers, but it was fun to sample a few. The sample tasting is a great way to enjoy a variety of different brews that you may not have normally ordered before.

By the end of our meal, we were completely full, and I can't imagine why?! Was it the beer, appetizers, meal or combination of all three that did us in? Well, maybe not totally full; we still had a smidgen of room for dessert. Don't think we're complete gluttons, we did decide to share one between us. The Snickers "Chaos" Pie is a combination of chocolate, peanut butter and whipped cream. We tried our best, but couldn't finish it all. Maybe next time.

The Southampton Publick House is definitely worth visiting. It's a place where the entire family can enjoy a casual dinner or friends can get together for a fun night out. Their Ales and Lagers are served at some of the top restaurants in New York including: Babbo, Gramercy Tavern, The Gingerman, Ram's Head Inn and Della Femina.

Open 7 nights a week. Serving Brunch on Sundays. Appetizers start at $5, entrees are $8 and up and desserts, $4 and up. Located at 40 Bowden Square in Southampton. Call 283-2800.

Interiors & Exteriors

HOMEGROWN WITH BRIAN HALWEIL

Note: This article is the second in a series of interviews with Richard Hendrickson, a local farmer, historian, and weatherman, about how families spent winters on the East End in the early part of the 20th century. Hendrickson, 91, chronicled the East End's meteorological history in Winds of the Fish's Tail.

Part 2: Homemade Ice Cream

"Out here, where it was more longtime agriculture ever since the whaling period stopped, if they weren't fisherman, they were farmers," Hendrickson starts in his steady, sing-songy voice as if he were exchanging tales around the cracker barrel. "There was a time they grew a lot of cauliflower here and Brussel Sprouts. That slacked off and we specialized mainly in the potato business and the dairy business.

"Most farm folks, as I remember, had one to five or six apple trees. If they didn't make their cider from apples, one of their neighbors did. So they had cider. They had a gallon or two that they set aside. And in time it became vinegar. So they made their own vinegar.

"Hard cider was just cider that got a little bit better. I never heard of anyone getting drunk on it. But maybe they got a little dizzy or they got sick.

"And they had a couple of bushels of apples that they put aside. So they made their own applesauce, and baked apples with raisins and a little brown sugar. That was delicious. And they made apple pies.

"And beside that there were always scallops, clams, oysters, and quite often fish. Lots of times in the late fall and early winter, a surprising thing I think to most people today, was that we had frost fishing. This is a whiting, a smaller fish that, in the fall as they migrate along our coast, a wave will wash up on the beach. You walked along at night, and quite often there's a fish just washed up along the shore flopping. So you pick it up. If you hadn't picked it up, quite often the next wave would take it back into the ocean. But if it had been a high tide and the tide was receding, those fish were left high and dry. So the next morning they fed the seagulls.

"And this was a pattern of life with nature. It's inevitable today, we have so many fishermen out there and – nothing against them, it's a way of life – they don't even know about frost fishing."

As a child, Hendrickson sometimes relished his mother's winter cuisine more than the fresh summer foods. "In the summer we had our fresh fruits, apples and peaches. But in the winter, you went out to the old drinking trough and chopped out the ice. With that and a fresh quart of milk which seemed like it was half cream, Mother made homemade ice cream. And we would go down in the cellar and get that quart glass jar full of fresh, canned peaches that were not canned unless they were fully ripe," he emphasized. "That was far better than anything you get today."

"And remember. We never heard that word, 'cholesterol.' There was a time there right after World War II when most kids were fed a spoonful or two of cod liver oil to stop a cold if their mother could catch them and give it to them. But it was life as it was at that time, you cannot reasonably and correctly compare it to today.

"What kid takes cod liver oil today, a spoonful every morning, out of a bottle? I think if the kids today got the bottle, they'd throw it in the town dump."

The Garden At Rock Cottage by Lance Brilliantine

Eye-catching, Exotic Clivia

Every year, in late spring, the Rock Cottage specimen clivia (pronounced kly-via) comes into bloom. What a magnificent plant, with clusters of upright, orange-salmon florets that are followed by cherry-like fruits. The plant is a frequent topic of our guests' conversations. Like roses, gardeners love clivia, and it deserves every compliment: spectacular, resilient, easy, and "defiant of bad gardening."

The plant was named after Lady Florentina Clive, granddaughter of Baron Robert Clive who founded the British Empire in India. The plant is a primitive genus of the Amaryllidaceae family, a distant relative of the common amaryllis. Originating from South Africa, it is sought worldwide. Research suggests the best colors may sell for as much as $100,000 per plant. The Chinese are devoted to clivia growing and the plant has become a competitive, national sport.

Clivia has large, evergreen, strap-like leaves and produces clusters of 10-to-20 flowers that appear on sturdy stalks that grow just above the leaf tops. Flowers may be upright or pendulous. Most clivia bloom in spring, though a few varieties flower in fall. The color is typically orange, but new varieties include salmon, yellow, pink, and even white. There are also some varieties with variegated leaves – highly prized and expensive.

Unlike its cousin the amaryllis, clivia does not grow from a bulb. Rather, it has an abundance of thick, rope-like roots that enjoy being pot-bound. Roots are sensitive to both disturbance and moisture. Use of a well-drained soil mixed with some peat moss and a pot one size smaller than expected works well. Because plants tend to be top heavy the use of pots with some weight is required. A mature clivia can easily fill a 24-inch pot.

Clivias flourish in bright light where they receive either early-morning or late afternoon sun, with shade in between. The plants grow actively from early spring through fall. In the active growing season, nighttime temperature above 50 degrees F and daytime temperature above 70 degrees F are best. This makes them ideal for East End gardens from about late May through October. Monthly feeding with a fish emulsion fertilizer and letting the soil dry between watering seems to be a key to success.

During the dormant season (late fall and winter) fertilizer and water should be withheld and the temperature reduced so the plant can rest. Just enough water to keep the plant from wilting seems the requirement. Temperatures in over-wintering houses (55-to-60 degrees F) are right for this plant.

While the preferred method of propagation is by division, many people grow clivia from seed. It is much less costly. Propagation from seed takes about a year to produce

Illuminations by Barbara Jo Howard

SAVING FACE

Is there anything more debilitating to one's ego than being legal drinking age and having zits? Is there no justice? One would like to believe that once we pass puberty, there is clear skin ahead. However, nothing could be further from the truth. The American Academy of Dermatology estimates that 17 million adults suffer from acne, and approximately 40 to 50 percent of women have chronic breakouts. As luck would have it, the areas most likely to suffer are the face, upper back and chest because of their high concentration of sebaceous (sweat) glands.

Causes vary, with a prime culprit being hormones that trigger excessive levels of androgens. Then there is the stress factor, though sometimes acne can just be a reaction to prescription drugs, foundation, spray and gels, and leave-in conditioners.

Once properly diagnosed, traditional therapy is typically benzoyl peroxide, retinoids, and/or antibiotics. Often a low dose birth control pill or corticosteroid is prescribed to help reduce sweat production. However, there is a new technology that promises "to clear inflammatory acne by 50% in just one treatment." The Nlite-V laser system is the "first laser to be cleared by the Food and Drug Administration to treat inflammatory acne vulgaris."

The developers report "forty-one patients took part in clinical trials performed at London's Hammersmith Hospital. These showed that a single five-minute session with the Nlite laser resulted in a 50% improvement in acne lesion count. Moreover, one-quarter of the patients treated were completely acne-free." These are impressive successes. To learn more about the Nlite, and to see if you are a candidate, visit www.usaphotonics.com and find a physician near you.

Now, as promised, here is the Week 2 report on my progress in Gurney's Fitness Challenge. Candice Monte, fitness director extraordinaire, enrolled me in her Boot Camp Class. It was a humbling experience. We did step exercises and my feet wouldn't follow my brain, or my brain couldn't keep up with Candice. Then we jumped rope. Remember, how simple it was to jump rope? Well, the darn thing got stuck under my feet. At first, I thought it was too long. Then it was too short. Then we stopped jumping rope and did push ups. I tried to push, but the "up" wasn't happening. Suddenly, it was over and we were stretching. How come my toes are so far to reach? After class, I thought I would collapse, but I felt great and energetic. To celebrate, I treated myself to a latte with skim milk.

During the week, I did two weight-training sessions. Candice varied free weights with machines and balls. Yes, balls. Exercise balls. They seem benign enough, but they pack a mean punch as you toss them about. The weight helps tighten muscles and improve coordination (both of which I could benefit from).

I asked Candice for suggestions on working out in this frigid weather. She recommends taking your time to properly warm-up before beginning any exercise. To be honest, I am pooped after the ten-minute warm-up and seriously consider tossing in the towel, but then surprise myself by finding the stamina to move on.

But, will I lose weight and inches? Find out as I count down Candice's six weeks to better fitness regime.

Police Blotter

Police received a call from an East Hampton man last Friday who said his car was bombarded with paintballs. According to police, the man was traveling south on Three Mile Harbor Road in his Volvo when he heard "a couple of bangs" on the side of his vehicle. When he stopped to investigate the odd sounds, he found splatters of paint. The Cedar Drive resident was able to wash most of it off, but the multiple impacts caused about $100 in damage to his paint job.

Police issued a summons to a Harbor View Avenue man last Sunday for unlicensed operation of his car. Three days later, after being told not to drive until his license was valid, police saw the man driving again. He was pulled over and arrested. After being processed at the police station, the man posted his $100 bail.

A video store in Montauk decided to press charges after a man attempted to steal from them. Police responded to the Elmwood Avenue location last Sunday after receiving a call from the owner. Apparently, a customer was seen putting an AM/FM pocket radio, complete with headset and batteries, into his pocket before attempting to leave the store. The owner tapped on the man's shoulder and asked for the merchandise back. After briefly pondering, "Do they broadcast the NFL play offs in jail cells?" the man removed the goods from his pocket and waited for police. Upon arrival, police arrested the man and charged him with petit larceny.

It will cost an Accabonac Road man $200 to replace the rear windshield of his mini van. According to reports, sometime between 1 a.m. and and 8:15 a.m. Tuesday, an unknown person shattered the window. Police are investigating.

Another window was smashed last week, this time at the Essex Street Skate Park. An employee of the town-owned park called police to report the incident on Wednesday, noting that it had happened almost a week prior while the park was closed. Police have no suspects at this time.

If your license is suspended, you shouldn't be driving. If you absolutely must drive, don't drive at twice the speed limit through historical, downtown Westhampton Beach - it's common sense. An East Moriches woman was arrested after doing so last week. According to police, she was pulled over for her excessive speeding and it was discovered that her license had been suspended. She was arrested and brought to headquarters for processing where she was released on $100 bail and her car was transported to the Westhampton Beach impound.

CHRISTMAS CLERKING
Dear Dan,

After reading about your last minute Christmas shopping experience at Macy's in Hampton Bays, I once again felt the urge to share. Not that I want to engage in one-up manship, but if you think your experience was harrowing... Holiday engagements forcing my husband and I to be in Manhattan in December, I impulsively filled out an application at Lord & Taylor. I thought I'd decide if I want to do this if they call me. Lo and behold, I was hired on the spot to work in L&T's "American Woman" Department. I quickly learned to never imply that some of us are in need of a plus size. Nowadays, when a female tips the scales to a size 16 and over, she is considered the "American Woman." This assignment made little sense considering I am 5'1" and weigh 107 pounds 1X, 2X, 3X – I didn't have a clue.

Unlike the female clerk you encountered, I loved to fold. For me, folding was like meditation. Once, having folded a hundred maroon turtleneck sweaters, I was near nirvana. No haphazard tables here.

And, with the exception of the occasional difficult customer (one calculator toting woman figured that an item from a 50% off rack, the day's extra 10% and her 20% savings pass, entitled L&T to pay her $4 for her purchase. The customers were great! I don't know how the Macy's clerks could be gloomy faced with the overall good natured, weary, patient bargain hunters.

I earned a whopping $639.04 and just received my employee discounted bill for $1,684.86. Was it worth it? Sure, the experience was priceless. Will I repeat the experience next year? No...once was enough.

Janet Pacell Gamza
East Hampton

I tried, but I can't get into the Zen of folding. Maybe you should write a book. –D.R.

IN DEFENSE OF MARTHA STEWART
Dear Dan,

As the Martha Stewart case goes to trial, it is clear that Ms. Stewart has already been convicted in the court of public opinion–without evidence and with a tone of "vicious glee" on the part of her attackers, says Robert Tracinski, a senior writer at the Ayn Rand Institute.

What accounts for this reaction? "There is only one explanation," observed Tracinski. "The cause for Martha-hatred is the ugly motive of envy. Martha Stewart is hated because she stands too high above the crowd, because she is 'too perfect.'"

"While most people are able to appreciate the accomplishments of others," Tracinski argued, "many take other people's achievements as an affront, an intolerable reminder of their own shortcomings. These are the people who desperately search for dirt to sling at celebrities, to show that the celebrities aren't so good after all–and who rush to join any witch hunt and repeat any allegation."

These ugly and vicious attacks against Martha Stewart, Tracinski noted, are not isolated events, but part of a large and dangerous trend in America: theculturally-sanctioned envy and hatred of successful people.

a good-sized plant that will bloom. Clivia's cherry-like seed pods typically contain two-to-four seeds. Seeds can be planted in a seed tray filled with a combination of sterile seedling soil and rotted compost. Press the seed into the top of the mixture and firm it down leaving the upper surface of the seed showing. The tray must be kept in a warm spot with good, but indirect light.

Germination typically occurs within 4-8 weeks – sometimes longer. Seedlings can be replanted into a 6-inch pot about eight months after sowing, but only with extreme care because the roots are fragile. The plant should be watered to keep the soil moist. Regular feeding also helps. Again, indirect light is required to grow the plant.

Clivia has generated so much interest that a society was founded that is devoted to propagation of the plant. Those interested in joining can contact:
